

Why do you need an interior designer?

An interior designer can help style a home and give it a fabulous makeover proficiently. Bindu Gopal Rao looks at key aspects that make these designers an essential part of your new home

A home reflects who you are, an extension of your personality, and, most importantly, is one of the biggest investments you will make. So, why not make it worth it by enlisting the services of an interior designer? We give you some reasons why this will be a good decision.

Professional View

When you hire an interior designer, first, you get a professional perspective of how to do up your home. This is a great starting point. The experience of a professional can give you insights that are both well-rounded and comprehensive and, primarily, facets that you would not have thought of. This also ensures you do not miss out on any vital aspect.

Budgeting and Planning

Home interiors are big business, so it is imperative that you set aside a clear budget to execute your ideas. Apart from this, planning to a tee is a must. As designers have the expertise, they can help in both these aspects and ensure that your dream home does not leave a dent in your finances. You can also get a break-up of how much you need to spend for each space.

Access to Resources

A key reason why interior decorators are vital is that they have several contacts, especially for furniture, fixtures, accessories and furnishings. They can help you choose the best option from among the plethora of choices and also advise you on new decor trends that can add a contemporary finish to your home. The advantage lies in the different price points to suit your budget.

Visual Storytelling

An interior decorator can help transform your home into the space you have envisioned. Their creativity comes into play when fashioning the space that you need and the home that unfolds is what you needed and translates your vision into a visual story. After all, a home must reflect who you are and what makes sense to you.

Save money and time

An interior designer will not just take the creative burden off your mind but also save time that you would otherwise spend in sourcing the needed accessories. Also, you get to save money as they know the exact fixtures and sizes that will fit into a space. Just imagine if you bought a sofa that did not fit in your living room.

Checklist for your interior designer

Now that you know why an interior designer is needed, here is a checklist that you can use to ensure you are making the most of their service:

- Set out a clear plan and evaluate your space and have a structure of what you want in terms of lifestyle and comfort for all in the family.
- Write down the requirements for each room in terms of the kind of look you need including furniture, storage, furnishings, and the like.
- Check out options for walls – texture painting, wallpaper, wall cladding, false ceiling, POP designer partition, and the like. Deciding on paints – eco-friendly options are also available – is a key issue.
- Check out tiling and flooring options.

- Light fixtures – mood lights, sensor lights and practical lighting in all rooms.
- Installation of fans, air-conditioners, geysers and other fittings like security systems and cameras.
